The Times Have Changed So Should We

Everyone's world changed after the attacks on the towers of the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. Those events created in Americans a host of feelings, including, fear, horror, anguish, pain and disbelief. The ivory tower we lived in was rocked. Symbols of America had been violated in the homeland. Innocent civilians were brutally murdered.

Who would do such things and why?

Religious zealots purportedly acting to save the world and their religion. They view the United States as the "Great Satan" and our way of life as an immediate threat to the existence of their religion and their belief in that religion. Since they are unable to compete with us on a traditional battlefield, they engage in unconventional warfare. Their goal is to kill as many Americans as possible through sabotage, assassinations, hostage takings, suicide bombers, dirty bombs and whatever other means they can think of to terrorize us. Their primary targets are not the military. They consist of: innocent men, women and children; our economic infrastructure; and our country's symbols of greatness. Such attacks are designed to affect us on the physical, economic and psychological levels in order to break our resolve and to get us to accede to their wishes.

What can we do about it?

We need to have the public and private sectors working together in a partnership. We need to promote better communication between these groups in order to develop an awareness of each others capabilities. We need to make every effort to prevent future acts of terrorism and minimize the effects of the incidents we cannot prevent.
